First, there was the 2006 Inaugural Congress on Disease Mongering in Australia which marked a watershed in networking among health care reformers and drug industry critics.

Then, the 2010 Selling Sickness conference in Amsterdam expanded the network and updated the work.

Now, Selling Sickness 2013: People before Profits is coming to Washington DC in 2013.

Make sure to mark your calendars!

Selling Sickness 2013 will bring together healthcare reformers, consumer advocates and health journalists to discuss the current scope of disease mongering and to develop strategies and coalitions for change. Topics will include misleading marketing, professional education, journalistic standards, social media, over-treatment, whistleblowers, new conflict of interest areas, and evidence-based screening policies. We will have panels, workshops, films, a unique good news exhibit hall, and extensive networking opportunities. Students and young activists are welcome.
