

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY

Community Psychology

A values-based psychology that builds theory-informed practice with a focus on cultural safety and social action

Master of Applied Psychology (Community) - The APAC accredited course at Victoria University offers a comprehensive psychology training program over two years

- Theory focusing on advanced community psychology knowledge and competencies
- Professional practice skills in ethics, psychological assessment, counselling theory
- Research and praxis drawing on critical theories including: decolonisation, feminism, critical race, and indigenous ways of knowing
- Placement comprising one internal clinic and two external community-based providing experience across the range of individual, group and community interventions.
- Meets requirements of the Psychology Board of Australia for full registration as a psychologist

The course enables a unique learning experience in a small, collaborative cohort. It fosters competencies toward strengths-based individual and community-oriented applications leading to a range of employment possibilities within the public and private sectors in areas of health, environment, justice, governance and education.

Enquiries - Professor Christopher Sonn

christopher.sonn@vu.edu.au

More details here